

U.S. - China VOC Control and Air Quality Management Symposium

Shenyang, China

May 20, 2016

Join the VOC Control and Air Quality Management Symposium, and capitalize on opportunities in one of the world's most demanding VOC control and air quality markets.

China's 13th five-year plan will be announced by March 2016. The regulations will align at the provincial level in Northeast China, where a huge demand in various industries will emerge. Northeast China has identified three of the major sectors affected by VOC and industrial air emission control: petrochemicals and refining, shipbuilding and ports, as well as industrial emissions. Join the VOC Control and Air Quality Management Symposium for a series of meetings with government officials, environmental protection decision makers, potential buyers, and other commercial partners. By attending the symposium delegates will be intricately familiarized with China's updated five-year plan at both the national and provincial levels, environmental protection regulations, and be educated on USTDA programs and funds associated with VOC control commercial deployment. Delegates will also have an exclusive opportunity to connect with local decision makers, and meet with hundreds of potential business partners through participate meetings, while learning more about their technical demands and partnership development.

The symposium and related meetings will target opportunities for U.S. equipment suppliers, technology providers, distributors and a wide range of service providers operating in VOC detection, emission control and deduction, ambient air monitoring and control, and air remediation sectors.
